SECRETARY OF MAYES FIRE

President Masser

The Prime Minister

The Foreign Secretary

Ar. Famai

M. Bligh

Mr. Bligh

Mr. Samiel

After an exchange of courtesies the Prime Minister thought it would be useful if they could exchange views about the present meeting of the General Assembly. He had detected a general sense of anxiety about the way the debate had gone. Perhaps he could say how glad he was that President Masser's speech had exercised a moderating influence. President Masser's said that heypt was a small country and desired peace throughout the world so that they could pursue their programme of development.

The Foreign Secretary said that there had been much talk in the past about disarmament and indeed much negotiation but so far no real progress had been made. Had the President any ideas as to how all this talk might now be translated into useful action. President Nasser said that the people were looking to the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom to "defreeze" the ice. He had, the previous day, proposed that there should be a meeting between the leaders of the USS.K. and the USS.K. But, in reply to a question, he said he had not mentioned this point in the talks he had had with President Eisenhower and Mr. Khrushchev.

The Prime sinister said it was possible to derive some encouragement from the fact that the Geneva talks on the cessation of nuclear tests had continued even after the failure of the Paris talks. Indeed good progress had been made and there now only remained a few points, albeit important ones, to settle. He was concerned to find some way in which vague talk in large assemblies about the need for disarmament could be translated into discussions by small committees of technical experts which might lead to some practical proposals. This was the way to make progress. President Masser agreed on the desirability of discussions between different countries on disarmament questions, but thought that ultimately it was up to the big fowers to reach agreement, particularly in view of recent technical developments. He added that after the Paris talks had broken down the international atmosphere had developed a fever and he thought this might eventually lead to the collapse of the Geneva talks.

The Frime Minister then turned to the tasks facing the United Nations, and in particular the Congo. There might indeed be other parts of the world where the United Nations could serve some useful purpose.

President Nasser thought it most important to keep the cold war out of Africa and said there was much that the United Nations could do to improve the conditions of the people.

The Foreign Secretary sold that the United Nations had done a good you in the composition to the absence of any effective Composes authority is here been well migh impossible for Mr. Harmarek jold to avoid making some mistakes. But this was not the fault of the United Mations Organisation. It was because of the difficulties inherent in the local situation. If the position in duames or undi deteriorated they would be faced with a even more difficult situation than in the congo.

President Hasser said that there was a ligally elected Covernment in the Congo. This must be supported. It was escential to bring Fr. Luminda and President Rasuviou together. He thought that his United Matios had erred in preventing Mr. Luminda from using his airfields and radio stations at a crucial time. There we e many trival conflicts within the Congo and it was difficult to see how the peoples could be persuaded to work together. He agreed that incorder to avoid bloodshed and in order to continue Mt. development some way must be found of uniting the different parts of the Congo. The Forsign Secretary said it was important that the large rowers were kept out of the Congo. President Masser said that this was not possible. Even if they did not use men or send in arrangulas the large Powers had interests and items which they pursued. President Masser agreed with the Prime Min ster's view that the right solution would be to try to get the different interests in the Congo to agree on the appointment of a pacificator.

Turning the the Middle - Ast, the Frime Minister asked Prosident Masser whether it was likely that there would be a period of clam and rest there. He thenght it was useful that the President had not attacked Jordan in his speech to the Castal Assembly. Was there anything that could be done to help with the general climate in the Middle Fast? Fresident Masser sold that Spyrt aid not want violence, which led to tension, in that part of the world.

tied up the childed kinggon with Jordan and had tried to sug est that we were helding to incite king Muscein to oursus aggressive policies. This was the opposite of the truth. To had used all our influence to restrain Jordan. It was very hard that we should be accused to something which was the exact opposite of that we kind a scally dome. President Masser said that it was difficult to avoid an attosphere of suspicion.

The Prime Minister said it was most important that steps should be taken to try to improve the relations between the United Kinggo and Mayor. The appointment of Ambassadors would be very useful. There was an increasing amount of commercial dusiness being done. If diplomatic emtacts were established this wall build up, and there would be an increasing interchange between the two countries.

after the evacuation of the case when it seemed that relations between the two countries would improve, but this, unfortunately, petconoleistichen the third kindlow, out the had their difficulties. If Israel as suplied with arms by the fest they had to are the solves in reply. The Prime Maister thought we had supplied nore arms to the arm countries than to the Israels. the Foreign Secretary agreed that we did supply arms to Jordan but said that it was our endeavour to try to ration our supplies of armaments to Middle Mass countries so as to avoid any lack After all, our arms weals were all of balance in the area. of Israel. The country was there. It was a fact. The Prime Minister said that the problem of Israel should be faced by Egypt. It was not insoluble, but it was no answer to try to protend that one could drive them into the sea. It was no good ignoring the existence

Prosident Masser said that never inarry of his speeches has what they wanted to do.

The Prime Minister said that if things could be unwound even a little, if some start could be made, there would be an improvement. When he had baid his visit to Moscow at the beginning of 1909 the situation had been bad. There had then been an improvement; but afterwards had come the failure of the Paris talks. But this meant only that we had to start again. Just as this patient approach was necessary in the widest field, so it should be applied in areas of the world where there were local strains and problems.

President Masser said that in 1905 Sir Anthony Roen had made a speech in the Guildhall which he, Masser, had described afterwards as constructive. Look what had cescribed allerwards as consumutive. Look what had happened. Israel had unried hir Anthony's proposals down that. Then there was the threat exercised by Israel. If too was a fact. There were at present 2 million Jews in Israel. What would happen when they had 6 million in so Israel would try to expand. Then there were the refugees. He had seen the condition in which the refugees were living and he did not want his people to live like that. Welve years had elapsed since the first refugees had been evacuated. Their condition in another ten years would be unchanged.

The Prime Timister said that he was very glad to have had tals mosting with President Masser and that they were agreed that the Foreign secretaries should carry on their discussion so that a start could be same in improving relations between the two countries. He hoped that the two countries could also work together on the great international issues such as the Congo. It was essential to ensure that the Congo crisis did not reseat itself anywhere else in Africa. The powers must be easy for such an eventuality, perhaps by having some skeleton impartial pacification machinery ready. It was not enough simply to hold the ring while the various parties fought it out: that would bring financial and administrative chaos. Active steps had to be taken to bring the various padds together.

President Masser agreed and said that he would like, before the Prins Winister latt New York, to call on him.

After an exchange of courtesies, the frime minister asked King Hussein what his plans were. The King thought he would be staying in New York for about six days. He would be making his speech to the Ceneral Assembly on conday. He has stready had a meeting with the Secretary-General had now felt hap ier as the Secretary-General had appeared to understand Jordan's problems. The frime minister said his feeling of the mood of the General Assembly was that they lended to respond more to a moderate approach than to vehemence. There were nearly 100 nations represented, many of them shall and relatively new. They really did seem to be interested to learn the truth, and were not to be put off with propaganda.

The king thought that the rest debate in the Assembly was really between two different ways of thought. The problem that Jordan faced was a reflection of this wider issue. He hoped to engage the sympathies of the United Nations in his affairs as he thought they would assume responsibility for any resolution in which they were involved. The King went on to say that he had evidence that the recent assassination in Asman had been planned for over a year. The U.A.R. had, of course, been planning to destroy Jordan for a long time. He and his people were under great pressure, and matters might continue to p point where they might lose their self-control; if so, they would go down fighting. But of course the King hoped that this state of affairs would not be reached. President Nesser's tactics of Dringing Communism into the Middle East had rallied opinion in Jordan

The King would not deal with the special problems of Jordan in the General Assembly, but would confine himself to a general statement of his case.

The Prime sinister said that the U.K. had sympathy with King Husseln and great admiration for the strengt he had shown in handling his difficulties. He was sure that the king was right to continue to follow a line of restraint and dignity.

The Prime Winiter went on to report priefly his conversation with President Masser. The latter had made a clever speech to the General assembly which had been very accepate in tone, and the Prime Minister had mought he should see him in order to establish a prise de contacte and had taken the opportunity to press whom him the importance of maintaining calm in the Middle Hast. Any Covernment which deliberately disturbed relationships in that area would bear a considerable responsibility. The rime Minister had comfonted President Masser with recent outpourings from Cairo radio. President Masser had, of course, argued that he was under attack himself and must therefore reply. Their meeting had been quite short and there would be further conversations between the Secretary of State for Horeign Affairs and the Egyptian Foreign Minister, Mr. Mawzi.

the Prime Minister added that the somewhat argressive tactics adopted by the Communists in the Ceneral Assembly had appeared to frighten President Masser.

In reply to a question, the King said that after the murder of the late Prime Winister of Jordan, a more had been sent to the U.A.d. with a copy to the Secretary-General of the United Nations. They had as yet received no reply. Further plots against the regime in Jordan had recently been discovered.

The Prime Minister asked whether any action had been suggested by the recretary-Ceneral. He throught that the position of the Secretary-Ceneral in the United Nations had been strengthened and not weakened by the recent attacks which had been made on him. The King said that Mr. Harmarskjold was quite hopeful that he would be able to have a useful talk with the U.A.R.

The King reviewed briefly the position of reighbouring countries in the Middle Rast. He thought that the position of Iraq was now somewhat stronger. The impact of Communication the Middle Rast might be different from that which President Passer expected. Though Nasser was himself anti-Communist, he was prepared to try and use Communism to further his policies. He might find them difficult allies.

The Prime Minister asked if the King had seen any other Heads of Overment in New York. The King said he had seen the Lebanese out they would take no line at all in the General Assembly. They appreciated Jordan's difficulties, but were afraid to support them publicly.

The King said that it was President Mas er's purpose to destroy Jordan. They had always opposed his policies and had been gaining prestige in the area in recent months. If Jordan was destroyed, Masser would have a freer hand with his plans in the Middle mast and his control over a ria would be strengthened.

and described now the individuals concerned in relent plots in Jordan had come from Syria. They had very good secret evidence that this was so, especially in connection with the relently discovered plots at inst the king. They had not, of course, made this evidence available to the U.A.R. The people concerned were mainly low-grade types, messengers and so on. They were being given bridge of about 100 a month - their salaries would be about 20 a month.
