SECRET

Sir,

In recordence with the instructions contained in your Circular No. 0170 of 7th December, 1946, I have the boncue to submit the following survey of the stiltude of vorious organised movements in Egypt towards Communism or Fascism.

N green

2. Of the Egyptian organisations which have, or seek, indepositional affiliations and are of sufficient importance to exercise a perceptible influence on the public life of the country, the most notable are those which have drawn their inspiration from the principles of the Islanic feith. The prodominently Islanic movements such as the Moslem 🛰 Brethren Society and the Young Mens' Moslem Association communist or Pescent subject to any external influence, either Communist or Pesceist but, particularly in the case of the Former, by represent an ideology of a politico-religious ncture which meneasitates their classification as extremist political organisations. political organisations. (It should be mentioned that before the wor the Moslem Brethren were, with good reason, suspected of receiving money from German and/or Italian sources, porticularly in connection with the Society's anti-British comparign regording the revolt of the Polestinian The very democratic social principles taught by Arobs). Islam and Islamic low one traditions, which regulate personal status, property and inheritance rights etc., are in many respects at variance with, if not directly opposed to, the Normist theory of Communism and its application or adaptation The leader of the Moslem in Soviet Rusgie and elsewhere. Frothren has indeed publicly proclaimed more than once that Communism is irreconcilable with the teachings of the Koran. The politico-religious revivalism of the Moslem Brethren Society is a reactionary force in that it stonds for a reversion to a social structure founded on the religious At the same time, and social teachings of a bygone age. however, Wils Society has obviously drawn some inspiration from the Fascist movement in so far as concerns its internal organisation. It has, for instance, a mere para-military organisation named "Scouts", who indulge in military drill and exercises and are suspected of secretly possessing arms.

3. The Moslem Brothren Society is purely an Egyptian creation, " but its striking success in this country in recent years encouraged its leaders to extend its activities to neighbouring Hoders also make a point of welcoming to their Meadquarters prominent orthodox Moslems, and not infrequently political leaders, from other Moslem and Areb countries. The Young Mens' Moslem Association is less radical in its ideals and methods than is the Moslem Brethren Society and is somewhat lead infrequential in Egypt. It is jurely an Egyptian growth and does not receive directives from any international headquarters outside Egypt. On the other hand it co-operates with similar bodies in other Islamic countries or communities, but it is doubtful the fact any such co-operation is so close as to empond to the premotion of an international campaign. This nevement has been of a conservative nature. It has frequently shown a tendency to interest itself in the Egyptian national cause and in that respect constitutes a semi-political force supporting the compaigns of the extreme nationalist politicians. Thus, although originally founded on a nonpolitical basis and in initiation of the Young Hens' Christian Association, it has tended to become more and more political, particularly under the presidency of Galeb Harb Pasha, who, since his election some helf a dozen years ago, hasgiven a much more pronounced political complexion to the Association. It will be remembered that owing to his anti-British activity, he was confined to forced residence in Aswan, his native town, during the latter part of the war.

/quarters

The leading unofficial organisation concerned with the  $4_*$ propegation of Arabiam is the Arab Union Society whose besic · object is to produce closer co-operation between the Arab peoples in a general way. This too is an Egyptian foundation and by virtue of its devotion to the cause of a general Arab renaissance must be closed as fundamentally anti-communist, anti-fascist and anti-tomerialist. Its political importance is small and its ideology has a racial foundation. It has an international character in that it is seeking to establish itself in other Areb countries or to affiliate itself with . existing organisations which have similar objects in those a countries. Its membership is relatively shall and indicates the limited nature of its popular appeal.

5. The Eyrtian brade union movement is still in its infancy and, while some of the scaller teade unions are led by known communists, the larger and more responsible unions are not at present under the influence of communist propagands to any extent, or at least have not openly sligned themselves with the communist movement. On the whole it may be said that the Egyptian trade union movement is anti-communist at the moment, but it is conceivable that unloss the Egyptian authorities embark in the near future upon the overdue reconstruction of the trade union system and upon the promulgation of progressive legislation for this purpose, the sober-minded leaders and members may show be overwhelmed by the more violent and demonstrative elements. The only trade union in Egypt which is effiliated to an intermational organisation is the Transport Workers' Union which is affiliated to the International Federation of Transport Workers' Unions. It cannot be said, however, that either of these organisations exercises much influence on the public life of Egypt.

6. Such co-operative societies as exist in Egypt, and they are mainly agricultural, are not within the category of ideological movements and are not capable at present of influencing the public life of the country.

7. There has recently been founded an Egyptian Labour Party, the nucleus of which was a shall group of trade unions presided over by Nabil Abbas Halim, which is popularly thought to be an organisation subsidized by the Polace with the primary object of attracting the working-class elements away from the communist movement and providing them with an outlet for the expression of their particular political aspirations. [In a sense therefore this Forty may be regarded as anticommunist, and purhaps even reactionary, since it is obviously not a spontaneous growth. Its ideological background is somewhat negative, and there is nothing to show that it has or is seeking any international offiliation. At present it is politically of minor importance.

/communist

8. As regards the various churches in Egypt, there have been contacts between the different Orthodox churches and the Fatriarch of Moscow who visited Cairo in 1945 (see Lord Killearn's despatch No. 940 of 5th July 1945). The Metropolition of Leningred also visited Egypt is short time ago as Nintfold of reported in my despatch No. 50 of 17th January. These contacts obviously have a political background, namely the promotion of Russian, and therefore also communist, influence among the Orthodox minorities of Egypt and the Middle East, but it ceems evident that the higher authorities of the Greek and other Orthodox churches have been very cautious in their response to the Russian overtures, doubtless for fear of compromising their relations with the Egyptian Government.

Hiteonhy/9, -Feta -9. In his despetch No. 1292 of 6th December, 1946, Mr. Bowker communicated a list of rational organisations in Egypt in which communist influence was overtly or covertly predominant, together with a supplementary list of branches of international organisations in Egypt falling within that category. The organisations mentioned in the first of those lists were dissolved during the Egyptian Government's anti-communist drive in July 1946, end are only mentioned have to show that communist ideology has gained a footbold in Egypt among a section of young intelligentsis, some of whom are believed to have received directives from Russian sources.

10. I would also invite/reference to my despatch No. 51 of. 17th January, enclosing copies of memorands by the Defence  $\frac{1}{4}\frac{1}{-}/q$ Security Officer, Egypt, illustrating the strategy and means of defence of the unlarground communist movement in Egypt.

11. I be sending a copy of this despatch to His Majesty's Ambassador in Moscow.

2. The first document, decling with the Sudan, admits the diversity of races in the Sudan and the incompleteness of Sudanese evolution towards being a nation. This leads to the conclusion that present circumstances do not permit of the Sudanese having the right of self-determination which in effect would heave the Sudan under British influence. But the right of self-determination should be reserved for the Sudan until its national evolution is complete. To convince the Egyptions of this they must be taught the democratic and socialist spirit, since the Egyptian policy towards the Sudan is the result of confused bourgeois thinking in demanding artificial unity.

3. To assist the Sudan's growth towards selfdetermination a period of transitional guardianship is necessary. The main object is to eliminate British imperialism and Egyptian control with all its reactionary tendencies is preferable to a British monopoly in the Sudan.

4. It would be illogical to force union upon the Sudan. They should be assisted to complete their growth and to reach a stage where they can use the right of selfdetermination.

5. The second document mainly elaborates the theme that the political parties, including the Wafd, have been ineffective in national leadership in the struggle against the British and that the initiative in this struggle has been taken by the Committee of Students and Workers, who have infused a new consciousness into the Egypticn people. The document admits that the Wafd, as the Opposition party, participated in the Committee of Students and Workers (as we already knew) but played only a secondary and ineffective role owing to its weakness resulting from its negative policy. The Wafd has now assumed a role of leadership in manoeuvring for power on a party basis but not in the interests of the national cause.

6. The existing political parties, it alleges, merely engage in discussions and issue statements. It is important for the notional struggle that a people's party should be formed to lead the proletariat, and there should be unity between the students, the workers and the whole people.

7. As regards the Committee of Students and Workers referred to above, it will be remembered that this organization, in which Wafdist and left-wing elements combined, first gained notoricty at the time of the anti-British agitation in February, 1946.

BRITISH EMBASSY,

26th July, 1947.

CAIRO

SECREP.

Sir,

With reference to my despatch No. 624 of 17th July, 1047 regarding communist activities in Egypt, I have the honour to inform you that I have received from the Security Services Representative a translation of a tract stated to have been written by the Central Committee of Hameto and Shar and circulated among members of that combined organisation.

2. The following extracts from the above-mentioned translation illustrate the general lines of that tract:-

- (a) From the end of 1945 there was a great increase in the progressive movement, with a strong connection with the University and with technical workers in various districts. So the regular progressive press began a new role, which role further increased after the Workers' Vanguard had played its part of free progressive leadership in the days of the Evacuation, of March, and of Palestine. It was natural that the progressive newspapers should undertake propaganda and mational democratic agitation side by side with the cultural part which it was formerly playing.
- (b) We are now passing through another stage. We have established ourselves in important sections of the workers and we have almost become the greatest political force in the University. Our influence has spread to the country and extends to different groups of intellectuals; we have also penetrated to the poor quarters in the capital. The two principal forces of the movement have joined together, and we are now quickly approaching the stage of a party of the masses.
- (c) The exposing of reactionarism to the people has increased, and so has the exposing of Fascist forces, but the parties of the Opposition have not succeeded in organising the people round themselves. So the people look to new forces for their leadership, for the realisation of their major demands which can only be fulfilled, as never before, with complete evacuation from the Nile Valley, democracy, and the raising of the standard of living of the proletariat."
- (d) As for the international field, the democratic forces with the Soviet Union at their head, have a positive role to play in international life; also her part in defending the peoples in the colonies and semi-colonies has begun to be apparent in spite of the world reactionary skirmishes and their attempts to distort her attitude (let us remember her attitude towards Lebanon and Syria, and her latest stand about Palestine). So Egypt looks to her to assist her in the international field.

(e) We will just have to change our method to suit the requirements of the new stage, so that when we write about progressive culture we must appreciate that we are writing to a wide section of the masses and to realize the cultural stage of these masses and their consciousness that we may raise them up to ourselves.

fo371/63046

- (f) When we write, our writing must not be dry and theoretical, unconnected with current happenings, but must be connected with those subjects which are of interest to people - if there is a lot of talk about Zionism, then we bring out a theoretical study of it.
- (g) If we want to write about the 'set-up' of the country, we should begin with a specific instance of persecution, and so on.
- (h) Here we must take note that our propaganda and our democratic agitation may often coincide with the other Opposition, but it differs from us because we must make clear the theoretical class foundations upon which our propaganda is based, something which the other papers of the Opposition do not possess; there is another difference, which is that our plan and our commentary on events is a sound one containing no opportunism, which is also something which the other Opposition does not possess....
- (i) Thus our paper must provide the members and helpers with the most important internal and external news and must provide a point of view. It must also continually indicate days of special occasions and the like, which the people must be prepared for and must give the slogans appropriate to them.
- The papers must certainly play a part in everything (1) touching the life of the masses, that is, it must become a pulpit for expressing the pains and hopes of the peasants, students, small government employees and women, and the way for exposing every persecution and oppression wherever such persecution and oppression shall appear. Our task must not be merely publication, but we must take up a positive line of action. We must set up trade unions where there are none and form a general union of trade unions, and direct the peasants to fight the existant exploitation from the present-day co-operative societies, and publishing the complaints of the slum districts and pointing out to them their rights stc.
- (k) In this way we can firmly bind the paper to the life of the masses in their daily struggle and can attract a large section of them to the political struggle.
- (1) As for the extension of constitutional rights, and the preservation of them it is something very firmly linked with the liberation movement, and our position regarding the Sudan and the unity of the struggle and the naturalness of democratic unity which joins it to us and the danger of separation from the side of Imperialism.

(m)/...

- (m) Also, we must make our internal programme clear the distribution of ownership, the setting up of companies and monopolies, the raising of the wages of workers and small government employees.
- (n) The paper must not forget its role towards the Near East, for these countries read Arabic and we are joined to them by the unity of the struggle against Imperialism. We must concern ourselves in their news and make the peoples of these countries feel the unity of this struggle. Thus the distribution of our paper must not be restricted to the Nile Valley, but must extend to these countries so that it may help in the idealogical and fighting link in the Near East.
- The conclusion of all this is that the task of the (0) newspaper is to follow its previous path of educating, making propaganda, and doing national democratic agitation, together with the care of the masses, its But the new departure in the growth of readers. the progressive forces puts on to it new fundamental burdens, which are that it must undertake the general political formation for the members and supporters and must increase its connection with the masses by guiding them in their daily economic struggle and linking up between this struggle and the political one so that we can attract a larger number of the masses to this field under the standard of the workers' vanguard, just as we must bind the masses round the party whose formation has been decided upon and make clear its programme. Added to which is the help in linking up the struggle with the Near East.
- (p) Has this newspaper undertaken this role?.... not at all, it still lacks a great deal. It lacks connection with the problems of the country areas and the problems of women, and its cultural page and story page is weak. Often too, it lacks clear direction in many matters.

There are actual reasons for this deficiency, which is that it is a newspaper with a limited number of pages and words. Also up to now it has not been equipped with a sufficient number of skillful editors, and its editors still lack experience.

3. The Security Services Representative states that it is thought that the newspaper referred to in this tract "Al Gamaheer" ("The Masses"), which is mentioned in the penultimate paragraph of the enclosure to my despatch referred to above.

4. I am sending copies of this despatch to His Majesty's Representatives in Moscow, Baghdad and Beirut, to Governor-General of the Sudan, British Middle East Office, and Political Intelligence Centre, Middle East.
