I think this is now pretty good and that it should go forward. The only suggestion I have to make is that reference might be given in two places to Dr. Mervyn Jones's article in the Year Book. One is in regard to the nationality of a company and the other is in regard to the right of a State to intervene on behalf of shareholders in a foreign company when the State of which the company is a national is the State which is injuring the company.

I suggest that the three following things should be done simultaneously with regard to this paper: -

- (a) I should send it to Professor Gros in Paris, saying that this is a study which has been done here. We would like his observations on it or a copy of any study which has been made on the French side. We have every reason for legal collaboration in this matter.
- (b) A copy of it should be given to Sir F. Wylie, who is, I think, the Government Director of the company with whom we always deal, for his private information and for his comments.
- (c) Copies should go to the Research Department with a request to check it merely from the point of view of accuracy of fact and from this point of view make any comments by way of elaboration of the facts which they feel they can do.

2 Bault 7th September 1951.

P.S. I should like a copy of paragraph 23 for the meeting about the Anglo-Iranian case. There is something in this paragraph which might form the subject of a new footnote to our pleadings in that case.

The Maz Canal Con. any Concoasion

Introductory

The qualitan to be considered is whether the gyption deverment is entitled under international law to nationalize the sums Ganal Company or, in other words, to terminate the Company's concession before the appointed date (16th November, 1968).

This question will be considered under three hoadings: A. Would the nationalization of the Suez Canal Company be illegal according to the general princi les of international law relating to the treatment of concessions granted to foreigners?

(These princi les have been emboustively examined in con esten with the case of the Anglo-Iranian (11 C meany and are set out in paragraph (below).

B. Would the nationalization of the Suez Canal Company be 1110gal for any other special reason?

G. If the skyptian Government were to terminate the Sucz Ganal Company's concession before the appointed date, would it be possible for His Dajesty's Government to bring the matter before the International Court of Justice, even if the Skyptis: Government did not agree to such a course?

Woold the netionalization of the Sues Co

After much consideration, Mis Majorty's Coversment have t. decided to put forward the following principles of international law with regard to concessions in their Memorial in the Angle-Iranian Oil Company asso.

(a) While a Winte personnes the right to nationalise and, generally to expropriate property belonging to fereigners in its territory, it is entitled to do so only subject to conditions laid down by international law. Such property includes concessor greated by a State to foreign mationals. The mationalization (er expropriation) of concessions, as of other property rights, is governed by the general principle of international law obliging the State to respect the property and other vested rights of foreigners.

(b) The termination or concellation for the purpose of nationalization - or generally any expropriation - of a ecosession granted to a foreign maticmal is unlewful, if the State granting the concession has expressly undertaken, sither in a contrastual engagement with the State to which the foreign national belongs or in the particular concessionary contract, not to terminate it unilaterally,

(c) A measure of exprepriation or nationalisation, even if not unlawful on any other ground, because unlawful under international law, if in effect it is exclusively or primarily directed against fureigners as such, and it emnot be shown that, but for the measure of expropriation or nationalization, public interests of vital importance would suffer. The more fact that the State doog not obtain as much financial profit from the consecutes as it expected, or as it considers it should obtain, is not such a vital interest.

Svon in cases where the nationalization of the property $\{\mathbf{a}\}$

of fereigners, including concessions granted to them, is not unlawful on any other dround, the taking of the property becomes an unlawful confiscation unless provision is made for compensation which is adoptete, proupt and affective. (a) Where the mutionplination is unleaful, the relief to be granted is governed by the principles formulated by the Permanent Court of International Justics in the Court Incharge (Glain for Indennity) (Morits) case (Series A, Mo. 17). According to these principles the princy remary is restitution in kind (or, where such restitution is ingractizable, the payment of persistary compensation, instead of restitution, consisting of a sum "corresponding to the value which a restitution in kind would beer"), together with permissy damages for loss metained which would not be covered by restitution in kind (or by payment in place of it). (f) If it is otherwise lawful to nationalize the enterprise. which is covered by a contract of ecosession with a foreigner, and if that contract contains a provision for arbitration, the empart of compensation due must be doulded by the Arbitration Gourt provided for in the compession, (s) A measure of configention or mationalisation of a conversion which is contrary to international law, engages diractly the international responsibility of the State, if it is the result of legislation or other action educting of no recourse againet the measure to local courts or the tribunals provided for in the concession agreement. In addition, the international responsibility of the State is directly ungaged on the further ground of denial of justice if such a measure is get into force on the protect of alleged defucite on the part of the concessionsire and if the correctorse of such allogations is not proved to the satisfaction of the appropriate judicial tribunal (in particular to the matinfaction of the judicial tribunal provided for in the concession, if one is as specified).

principles of international law bearing on the general question of the cancellation of concessions granted to fersioners. In the eneming peragraphs an attempt is made to apply these principles to the case of the Sues Genel Company. 3. The Buen Canal Company (La Compagnie Universaile de Genel Meritian do Bues) was formed in order to emploit the concentions granted by the Firmans of the Vidiroy of Says on the Nich Revenuer, 1891 and the 5th January, 1055. The Firmen of 1895, it should be noticed, contained the Vicercy's approvel of the Congery's Distuice. There followed the Convention of the 22mi Pebruary, 1866, between the Company and Ismail Pasha, Vicasoy of Sgypt. (retified by the Subline Parts on the 19th Morch, 1855, - see personal 5 below) This referred to the two earlier Memore and some interventag arrestances atmaining between the two parties between 1854 and 1866. Article 15 of the 1866 convention seyst "It ast adelard, a there d'interpretation, gate l'expiration des gentre-vingt distant one de la consection du Canal de Russ et à définit de nouvelle entente entre le Couvernement égyption et la compagnie, la concession prendra fin de ploin droit". The generation actually sense to an and on the 16th Royacher, 1968, because that is $9 years "& compter do l'aphevement des travaux et de l'ouverture du Canal maritime a la grande nevigation" (See Article 16 of the Firmen of 1896 mulifying Article 3 of the Firmer of 1854 which morely said "Le forde de la concession est de quetre-vingt-dim-meufs and à partir du jour de l'ouverture du Canal des deux mars"). Repris being at the time a vaneal state of Turkey, the ratification of the Firmens by the Sublime Porte was necessary the the full legal effect and such retification was emprovely reserved in the Firmans of 1850 and 1856 themselves. the Aubling Ports retified the Convention of 22nd February,

1866 on the 19th March, 1866, but there is no doubt that this retification extends to the Firmens of 1854 and 1856 as well so to the Convention of 1866 itself except in so far as the later instruments medified the earlier ence. In fact the object of the Convention of 1866 was to make it possible for the Sublime Forte to ratify the Firmens, to some features of which it abjected. The Convention of 1866 therefore contained the measurery medifications.

5. Thus, we have a situation in which there is a concention granted by the Ngyptian State to the Sums Ganal Gampany and, seconding to its terms, the concention is to endure until 26th Novellings, 1968. The concention, it should be noted, contains no express undertaking on the part of the Ngyptian State not to terminate or concel it unilatorally; nor does it contain an arbitration clause. To this extent it differs from, and is less favourable to the concentionaire, than the Angle-Framian 011 Genpuny's concention.

On the other hand, if it could be shown that the 7 nationalization of the Sees Ganal Company was a measure "exclusively or primarily directed against foreigners as such", and if at the same time it could not be shown by Mgypt that but, for the nationalisation of the Company, Mgyptian public interests of vital importance would suffer, then such nationalization otherwise peesibly lawful, would become unlawful. It should met be difficult to show that the nationalization of the Suck Ganal Gompony was a measure "exclusively or primerily directed against foreigners as such", even though the Suer Canal Company may, from a strictly legal point of view, be an Egyptian company. (see paragraph 8 below). Her should it be difficult to vefute the possible Agyptian argument that, but for the nationalization of the eanal, Egyptian public interests of vital importance would suffer.

8. It is accessery now to consider the nationality of the Sucz Canal Compeny.

Article 21 of the Firmon of 5th January, 1856 states:

(italies ours)

Artisic 26 of the Convention of the 22nd Pebrusy, 1866 states,

"La Compagnie universelle du Canal maritime de Bues étant ÉRIRIENE, elle est régie par les lois et unages du pays". (italies curs).

However, the article goes on to state,

"Toutefoie, on or gui regarde an constitution, come société et les repports des associés entre eux, elle est par une convention apéciale réglée par les lois que, en Prence, régiosent les sociétés anonymes. Il est convenue que toutes les contestations de ce chef seront jugées en France par des arbitres aves speel come sur-groitre a la Cour impériale de Paris". It is not easy to assess The propise significance of these provisions. It is usuall for an instrument granting a concession to a company also to contain that company's statutes. On the face of it that feature atcompthems the argument that the Supe Canal Company is a purely Myrplian company, the provision for the regulation of the Company's affairs according to French law being regarded morely as an incorporation of French company law into Revealer law for the purpose of regulating the affairs of this particular Egyption ecopony. But this explanation hardly bolds good with regard to the provision that disputes affecting the internal organization of the Company are to be putiled not merely apporting to French law but also by French tribunals. The pountbility has to be faced that the Bues Canal Company may have a coal methodality, Franka and Sypping, it such as it may, it can not be disputed that the Sues Canal Company is an Myytian company, nor has the Genpeny ever disputed this fact. One of its first actions was to apply for authorization to operate in France as an Rgyptian company, in accordance with the provisions of Article 2 of the Franch law of 30th May, 1857.

9. Although, as we have seen, the fluer Genel Company undoubtedly possesses Rgyptian nationality it may be argued that it also possesses Franch nationality. This argument depends on the fact that

- a) the Company has a deminible administratif in Paris, as provided for in Article 75 of its Statutes. The general meetings of the shareholders of the Company are hold in Paris, and it is also in Paris that the "Conseil d' Administration" and the "Comité de Direction" of the Company meet, and that
- b) Article 74 of the Company's Statutes and Article 16 of the Convention of 1866 provide for the determination by French tribunals of internal disputes within the company.

10. The international isw relating to the nationality of companies is extremely complex. It is not proposed in this paper to discuss this question other than briefly, because fortunately a lengthy discussion of it is not strictly nonnearry. According to Borehard (The Diplometic Protection of Citizens According to Borehard (The Diplometic Protection of Citizens According to Borehard, There are different criteria, however, for establishing domicil.

11. According to one theory, supported by Italy, Spain and Portugal, a corporation is dominicated where it has its principal contro of exploitation (principale exploitation). On this basis the Sues Canal Company would be an Ryptian company.

12. According to the so-salled Anglo-American theory, a corporation is domiciled in the country where it is incorporated. On this basis, also, the Suss Canal Company would be an Agyptical company.

13. According to a third theory, a corporation is domiciled in the country where it has its centre of administration (singe social). This theory is supported by France and most other Maropean States, including the U.S.S.R., and also by the Latin American States, International law, in many other respects a combination of 14. Anglo-American and Franco-Latin American practice, seems in this respect also, to have recognized both the second and the third of the scove theories, though not the first theory. Thus the British-Mexican Claims Commission, in the Madere Commany ease (American Jearnel of International Law, vol. 20, 1934, p. 590 at p. 593) followed the incorporation test. On the other hand, the Belging-Gormon Hined Arbitrel Tribunal, in the case of Le Reddeles Greenent v. Roller (Tribungur Arbitvent Mister, vol.3 p. 570 at pp. 572-5) fallewed the test of the sizes social. Partner. in the case concerning Gertain German Interests in Polish Tener Silecia (Series A, No. 7) the Pennment Court of International Justice to some extent followed the test of the allow sector in saying "Novertheless, segard must be had, in the first sloop, to the charchelders, for, while German law as well an under other systems of legislation, it is the general mosting of shareholders which emergines the supreme power of the Company. From the Sameral Mosting, which is the constituent body, directly emenate the pewers of the Beard, and directly or indirectly, these of the mangement. It is a well-known fact that the seminition of a majority of the shares is precisely the means by which an interested person or group of persons may seek to satain control over a concern". (at p. 69).

The design elements referred to above is one element, and the most important element, in establishing the location of the size secial.

It is not proposed to eite further authority for the proposition that, under international law, a company can be said to possess the untiquelity of the State where

(1) It was incorporated or (ii) It has its sibes equial #

CITIS

On this beels, under international law, the Pass Const Company has a dual mationality. There is no a priori resoon why a company, like an individual, should not have a dual nationality. In fact the dual mationality of a company can fairly easily arise in prestice. Thus in the case of the Societé say de Trevise etc. (Fournal Clunet, 1889, p. 510) the Court of Cosmetics at Rome declared the company Italian, because, although its mines postal whe in France, its principals emicitation was in Italy. Under Franch law, such a company would materally have Franch mationality. 16 . The question of the nationality of the Sues Genel Company, however, although important and interesting, is not absolutely vital to the issue, because there is no doubt that, whatever the nationality of the company, the great properties of the chares are hald by British and Frunch interests. Gensequently, even if it were to be held that the Company is an Egyptian company and nothing else, it could still be argued, and argued powerfully. that a unilatoral empediation of the Company's eccession was a measure "primarily directed against foreigners as such" and that it could not be shown that, but for the unilatoral eshcellation of the concession, Repution public interests of vital importance would /masser.

In an article entitled "Claims on behalf of Mationals who are hareholders in fereign companies "(British Year B Internetional Lev, 35 (1949), p. 225) Dr. Merrys Je at p. 286) "International haw and practice now attribute netionality to corporations, though there is no amanimity as to the rules to be applied in determining that metionality...... treaties to-day frequently speak of "Rationals" as includin spections and usually edept, as a test of such mationality, the fact that a corporation has been formed under the laws of a particular State. There is some authority in the decisions of arbitral tribunals for this test". This author, therefore, som suffer. Although the law is not quite certain and may still be in process of development, it seems to be an established rule that, if State A, in eigenmetaness involving its international responsibility, nationalises a company processing the mationality of State A, and that company has shareholders who are mationals of States B and G, then States B and G may bring an international claim against State A on behalf, not of the company as such, but on behalf of their mationals who are shareholders in the company such claims being in proportion to the amount of shares hald by these shareholders. Consequently, although the Company may be an Ngyptian company, the United Eingdom and French Governments would not only have a right to intervents in the onse but would also each have a valid and substantial claim against the Ngyptian Government.

17. The main question has, therefore, already been enswering. For the Egyptian Government to terminate the concession of the Bass Ganal Company before the 16th Hovember, 1968 would, it is submitted, be an unlawful ast because it would be a measure "primerily directed against foreigners as such" and it could not be shown that, but for the termination of the echoeseion, Egyptian public interests of vital importance would suffer. If, however, this contamines were to fail, the legality or stheswise of Egypt's action would depend on whether the compensation affered by Egypt was "adaquate, prompt and effective". It is not thought worth while to pursue this hypothetical question any further at this stage.

After an analysis of the precedents, Dr. Morvyn Janes, in the article already referred to, concludes "In such a case it is believed that modern international law is sufficiently developed to allow us to say that there is a legal right to intervene on behalf of individual shareholders" (opedit., p. 257).

Professor Georges Saucor-Hell, in an opinion which he 19. prepared for the Succ Canal Company on another question, and which is dated the 20th November, 1948, stressed the universal character of the Company, which was recognized on many occasions by the Egyptian Courts. The Company, he said is universal "yer see usagers, par ses capitanx at par la composition de son conseil d'administration". He refers to the Firman of 1854. by which Ferdinand de Losseys was to form a "compagnie formés de espitalistes de toutes les mations" (premble) er a "eempagnie universelle" (Article 1) and under which the canal dues were to be "toujours égaux pour toutes les mations" (Article 6); to Article 14 of the Firman of 1856 which guarantees that the senal and its ports shall be open to all merchant ships without distinction of nationality; and also to Article 14 of the Convention, respecting the free mavigation by all shipping of the Suce Maritime Canal, signed by the loading Maropean Pewers and Turkey at Constantinople on the 29th Cotober: 1888, which states,

"Les Heutes Perties Contrastantes convienment que les engagements résultant du présent Traité ne screat pas limités par la durée des Actes de Concession de la Compagnie Universelle du Genal de Buez".

20. It is doubtful, however, if the "universal character" of the Bues Genel Company, although an unquestioned fact, meterially affects its legal situation, one company. It has already been shown (paragraph 16 shows) that, although the Sums Ganal Gompany may be an Egyptian company, this factor does not prevent the United Kingdom and French Governments from intervening in the case. The Suce Company does not have a supre-mational character equivalent to that of the Baropean Goal and Steel Community which 1% is proposed to establish under the Solumon Fim Treaty. Not being outablished under an international treaty, it does not have the character of a public international organization, and so it does not have even the limited right of appearance before the International Court of Justice which such organizations onjoy under paregraphs 2 and 3 of Article 34 of the Statute of the Court. The most that Professor Seasor-Hall can make of the universal character of the Sempany is to any that it is analogous to the International Committee of the Red Orean which, although a private association under Smiss law, "bénéfisie, pares qu'il remplit dans le monde moderne une mission de haute civilisation, et parce que les Servernaments as sont mis d'asserd your consacrer par des conventions intermationales les principes de la Speix Rouge degages par lui, d'un tel prestige et jouit, en fait, de telles prérogatives, qu'un autour le considère coune 'une personne mon-étatique de droit des game" et lui attribue en quelque serte une personnalité internationale en devenir". 21. On the other hand, although the universal character of the Sues Ganal Company does not materially affect its situation one company, it does materially affect the character of its energenion, our concession. The concession as we have seen, is contained in the Firmons of 1854 and 1856 and in the Convention of 1866 (retified by the Bubline Porte). It was the latter which was of pre-eminent importance, because it was on the bacis of this Convention that the Sublime Porte gave its ratification and consert to the project. The 1866 Convention was concluded "Matro Son Altesse Issail Feehs, Vice-Roi d'Raypte, d'une part, et la Compagnie Universelle du Canal maritime de Cass...... d'autre part".

The concession is not, therefore, on the room of it was obligations towards other Fewere. Like most concentions greated by a State towards alies mationals it is mrime furie subject to municipal (1.e., Mgyptiam) law, unless any intention of the parties to the contrary can be preved. To some actant, in the same of the Same Consl Company's concession, such a contrary intention can be proved, because the concersion provides in some respects for the submission of the Company to French lew and to the jurisdiction of French tribunals (Articles 73 and 74 of the Statutory Article 16 of the Convention of 1865), This is without doubt a significant exception to the general rule that a concession is governed empluatvely by municipal law. It arises in this case because the instrument granting the consession also contains the statutes of the concessionsire company, and it is provided inter alls that internal disputes within the company are to be decided seconding to French low and by French tribunals. Whetever be the sunsequences of this exception, however, they soon to relate mainly to the question of Actornining the antienality of the Sues Canal Company and here already been discussed in that connexion (paragraphs 8-15 above). The exception now under discussion does not of itself some to bring the ecasession autometically within the sphere of international law, such as would be the result if it formed part of a treaty. 22. It is, however, possible to argue that the Saes Ommal Company's ecnosation represents for Maypt on International treaty obligation. This proposition can be argued in two wayas (a) The concession itself is a treaty (paragraph 23 below). (b) The diffection of the concession is an implied term of a wellmove international treaty by which Rgypt is bound, manely the Convention of Constantineple, 1868 (paragraph 24 below). 23. The composition is itedly a treaty

It is generally considered that by a "treaty" is meant an agreement between two States, or between a State and a public international arganisation or between two Public international organisations. The definition of a "treaty" is not meconsarily, however, as limited as this. For example, the demment to Article 1(c) of the Exrord Duart Convention on the Low of Treaties, 1935, mays "it is not to be implied that an agreement between two or more such antitles (milight "s person other than a State") and effectally one between such an antity and a State, may not properly be regarded as a treaty". Thus, the sympletic signed at Home on Sith March, 1925, between Austria, Mangary, Italy and Engeniaris on the one hand and the Southern Reilway despeny on the other hand, was subject to ratification by the States concerned and was registered with the League of Nations (League of Nations Treaty Series, volume 23, p. 255).

Similarly, Professor Briarly in his report on the Law for Treation, (A/CF:4/23 of the 14th April, 1950) prepared for the International Law Commission, writes "it is not implied that agreements to which such entities (sciliest componies and other organizations "not personaling the attributes of States"), in addition to States or International organizations, are parties, lack hinding force, or that their oblightory force is not derived from international law"(at page 18).

Neither the Harverd Draft Convention nor Professor Brierly, in his report, in fact defined agreements between States and companies as "treaties" but both the Harvard research lawyers and Prefessor Brierly were concerned with draft conventions only and their definitions were adopted purely for the purpose of defining the extent of their out draft conventions. It was for this reason that they both added the warning against drawing the too hasty conclusion that agreements to which sempenies were parties were loss binding under international law then treatics as defined by them.

It is in this connexion that the universal character of the company, the gaite extreordinary international importance of the work allotted to it and as forth are relevant fustors. It is not proposed to go into these matters here, although,

if it were decided to start a law-suit against Hypt, they would have to be stadied carefully. Another matter which would have to be gone into very thoroughly would be the exact historical autocodents of the Firmans of 1854 and 1856 and of the Convention of 1866, with a view to showing that the Baes Canal Company's concession was not an evidency concession governed by municipal law only but was in fact arrived at as a result of prolonged international negotistions, including an arbitration, presided over by Mapelson III of which the award was given on 6th July, 1864.

24. The entropying of the expension is an implied term of a wellknown treater by which farmt is house, menely the Convention of Constantingple, 1858.

This argument proceeds upon a rather different busis. The Convention of Constantinople (1888) was concluded in order to accurs that the senal should be open in war, as well as in peace, to the ships of war and marchant ships of all flags. It will be recelled (see paragraph 19 above) that Article 14 of the Convention of Constantinople (1888) states: "Les Hauter Parties Contractantes convignment que les engagemente résultant du présent Fraité ne seront pas limités par 1s durée des Actes de Consession de la Compagnie Universelle de Canal de Sees".

From this it follows that Hgypt is bound by an express international obligation to essure to the veccels of all nations the right of free mavigation in the eshal both during the concention⁴ maintance and after its existence has some to an end. It is probably not an exaggeration to may that this Article was drafted on the assumption that the concession would remain in existence until 16th Nevember 1968, and it might be argued that it was an implied term of the Convention of 1888 that the concession should not be terminated before that date.

The fact that the senal was operated by a "universal" company (see paragraph 19 at seq. above) and not directly by the Mayption State was a guarantee to the Powers, not merely that the Genel would be efficiently operated, but also that it would be operated in a namer conductve to the interests of all nations. The concession would not last indefinitely - the Powers know that - but it had a long time to run. Had the Powers considered that the cenession sight be terminated unilaterally at any time by Egypt, they would not have had any such guarantee either of efficient operation of the estal or of operation of the const in a manner conducive to the interests of all nations. In that event, they would have felt bound to insort a provision in the 1888 Convention to the sfreet that the ognal should remain under international management at least until 1968. The fact that he such provision was expressly inserted may be used to advance the proposition that it was not inserted because it was not necessary, and the reason it was not measury was that it was an implied term of the 1888 Convention that the ecocomption should not be terminated before 1968. At first sight this argument may not appear very strong, but it is fairly strong if one has regard to the facts. Suppose, for instance, there had been any segmention that Sgypt (or Turkey) could unilaterally annul. the concession in 1889, would the Perers have concluded the Convention of 1888 in the same terms as they did in fact conclude it? Yet, legally, the right of Rgypt (or Yurkey) to ennest the echevation unilaterally in 1689 was just as strong as is the right of Sgypt to omneel it unilaterally in 1951, or at any other time before the appointed date. The more pussage of time has no effect on this right; it either exists of it does not exist.

I think you will be interested to see the attached neworandum which discusses the situation which would arise if the Egyptics Government tried to nationalize the Suce Canel Company before the termination of its esseention. We taked the legal member of our Research Department to propare this when removes about the possibility of Egypt fullowing Permis's load were first moted. We should be glad to remeive any commute which your Ministry may afre to put forward. A copy is being sent to Sir Francis Sylie for his private information.

S. I should add that there have been no further grounds for supposing that the Egyptian Government have any intention at the present time of maticulizing the Canel Company but, with the pelitical superpare as it is, one would never be supprised if they attempted to lay their hands on it for reasons both of maticualian and empidity.
